Workshop #21

Getting Cappy! Creating Art Using Plastic Bottle Caps

Amanda Fry

EL, MS, HS

This workshop is inspired by the work of Michelle Stitzlein who creates large scale sculptures out of recycled materials. Come learn about the exciting murals created by the students at Clinton Prairie Elementary using recycled materials that are colorful, free and plentiful- plastic bottle caps. Participants will use bottle caps and plastic lids to create a 4x4 foot mural. Participants will need to bring a cordless power drill to this workshop (or share with another participant).

Five Lessons Art Educators Can Learn from The Little Prince: Language and Resources to Articulate What Occurs in the Art Room

Sarah Wilcox

EL, STDT

Using the children's book The Little Prince (Saint-Exupery, 1938) to frame lessons learned in the art room, this presentation shares a theoretical language to advocate for visual thinking, emotional cognition, aesthetic experiences, and alternative assessments. Knowing that advocacy is a necessity for every art teacher, this presentation offers ways to communicate why what is happening in the art room is imperative for students.

Collective Drawing

Charity Shouse

ALL

An artist collective is an artwork completed by a group of artists working together to achieve a common goal. For this The drawing workshop the participants will become an just such a group and work collectively to create a large scale image. The lesson, combines the foundations of esteemed artist and educator, Betty Edwards with easy to apply measurement techniques. This simple but effective lesson shows students that not only do their actions affect the rest of the group but that they can realistically draw ANYTHING with ease when they break in down to line, shape and value. Lesson plan and instructions will be offered to all participants.

Universal Goals vs. Localized Goals: A Comparative Approach to Understand Art Education

Kyungeun Lim

EL, MS, HS, ADMIN

Should art education have universal standards or localized approaches? The presentation will utilize a comparative perspective to examine art education in the U.S., U.K., and South Korea in order to discuss the issues. Come and explore an overview of comparative study, a background of art education and art education policy in the U.S., the U.K., and South Korea, a discussion of the similarities and differences among the three countries' art education policy, and final discussion regarding universal or contextualized approaches to art education.

5 Easy Pieces

Ginger Brinn EL, MS

What is really important to teach in the art room? Would it be the conceptual ideas, the technical aspects of how to create art, working through and planning out ideas, having students try to “loosen” up when it comes to their art work, observation? Where is the “how” and the “why” of what is getting taught to students?

The Evaluation of Art Teachers

Steve Gruenert EL, MS, HS, STDT

The door opens and in walks your administrator. Does some art teachers think "oh no, I wonder what they think of what is going on in the room?" Take this opportunity to hear from administrators regarding what they are looking for when they come to the art room, what they hope to see, and what their past experiences let them see. This session will present data from over 50 principals from across the state of Indiana and an opportunity for members of the audience to share their reflections of these findings.

Keynote: Jesús Moroles ALL

"Making a difference thru Art Education"

A way to connect thru art education.
Getting students hooked on education.

Jesús Moroles lives and works in Texas, at his studio in Rockport. He received his Bachelor of Fine Arts from the University of North Texas, Denton, in 1978 and apprenticed under Luis Jiménez for one year immediately after his graduation.

Critical recognition for Moroles came quickly. His most visible public sculpture is “Lapstrake” 1987, a massive 22 feet tall, 64-ton work located across from the Museum of Art in New York. Moroles has received significant national attention with his inclusion in the landmark exhibition, “Contemporary Hispanic Art in the United States,” which was shown at major American museums. His largest scale single work is the “Houston Police Officers Memorial,” dedicated in November 1992. The memorial is comprised of a granite and earth rising stepped pyramid surrounded by four equal inverted stepped pyramids excavated from the ground.

Moroles has more than 2,000 works in place in China, Egypt, France, Italy, Japan, Switzerland, and the United States, in museum, corporate, public and private collections. His most recent distinguished awards include the recipient of the Three Dimensional Texas State Artist Award 2011, the recipient of the 2007 Award for Visual Arts by the Texas Medal of Arts Awards Committee and also recipient of the 2008 National Medal of Arts which is the highest award given to artists by the United States government.

Photoshop Techniques: Simple Editing Tips for Better Image Files
Kevin Schultz HS

When you photograph drawings and paintings, do the image files lack the oomph of the original art? Your students’ art works are only as good as the image files you create. Participants in this workshop will learn basic photo editing tips using Adobe Photoshop. Photoshop can be a complicated program to learn. These simple steps will have you on your way to making your images more like the original art. We will also cover cropping and resizing your image files. Handouts with step by step instructions will be provided with a demo for each technique by the presenter. Demo will be with a PC, but the procedures should work with a MAC computer as well.

Rhizomatic Curriculum Structures of Choice Based Art Programs

Clyde Gaw

EL

Children's minds are not homogeneously constructed. Within a rhizomatic learning structure, children may become active participants in the development of curriculum and explore educational lines of flight not available to them in linear approaches to curriculum. No one can predict how far learners will go when interests, imagination and emotional drive are unleashed within the psycho-emotional dynamic of rhizomatic learning structures.

Researching the Art-Play Studio: Children's Reflections on Art and Play

Dianna Huxhold

EL, HE

Researching the Art-Play Studio: Children's Reflections on Art and Play is a study in progress. The aim is to explore understandings of the relationship between art and play from the perspectives of elementary children. In this session the Art-Play Studio process is described, students' responses presented, and preliminary research findings shared. The potential role of play in classroom practice will be discussed as well as contemporary notions of play pedagogy found in art education literature.

Museum Websites as Learning Contexts

Jinyi Kim

ME

Art museums are firmly embracing the digital world to reach more people outside the physical museum space and reinforce visitors' interactions with art objects. This study reflects on how museum websites support visitors' agendas and visitor learning, using new application of digital technologies, such as extended digital learning programs and smartphone apps. Several museum websites are analyzed through Falk & Dierking's (Learning from Museums, 2000) contextual model of learning; the personal, the sociocultural, and the physical contexts.

Art Badges

Thom Maltbie

EL, MS, HS

The elementary students in our self-directed studio/artroom master different skills and acquire different concepts at different times, as they need them. I'm developing a system of Art Badges (similar to online badges or even Boy Scout Merit Badges) that reward a wide variety of artistic behaviors . . . in real time. Hear about how we are individualizing and differentiating Art assessment through studio habits of mind, student choice, and Badges. Bring your own ideas to the discussion.
